

Gas properties

Addition of heat at constant pressure to a gas result in:

Answer: Raising its temperature and doing external work.

Explanation: Increase in internal energy is related to the increase in temperature and increase in volume is related to the external work. When pressure remains constant, the volume must expand to accommodate for that, so the work is done to expand the material.